

The Conclusion—Studying Student Work

Thesis: In the play Hamlet, Hamlet seeks justice for his murdered father by attempting to kill the new king, his uncle.

Supporting Idea 1: Hamlet seeks justice because his father got murdered.

Supporting Idea 2: Over the course of play, Hamlet finds justice by looking for his father's murdered and trying to prove that it is Claudius.

Supporting Idea 3: Hamlet ultimately finds justice by killing his father's murderer, his uncle Claudius.

Conclusion:

Throughout the whole play, Hamlet seeks justice for his father's murderer. In the play, Hamlet goes through a serious journey to find the murderer. As the play goes on Hamlet still is searching for his father's murderer. Hamlet goes crazy while seeking his father's murderer. Eventually Hamlet finds the murderer which is his uncle Claudius. Hamlet's journey to find the murderer was a rough one. Then to find out that it was his uncle Hamlet who murders his uncle and figures out the ghost was right and real. Hamlet then kills Claudius at the end. Is this really justice? I think it is because Hamlet's father was murdered and Hamlet is his son. Imagine the pain of having your father murdered and watching the murderer sleep with your mother. Of course it's justice. Revenge isn't always justice but in this case it is. Hamlet dies but justice has been served I think.
